

Justin Giarrusso (b. 1991) is a composer of contemporary art music that appeals to diverse audiences, having written in chamber, choral, and orchestral genres. His music is characterized by light textures and is driven by formal structure. The subject of Giarrusso's works range from programmatic depictions of natural phenomena to purely musical explorations within a sound world. Recently, part of Divertissement Concertante was selected for the Lexington Philharmonic's New Music Experiment. Giarrusso has studied with Steve Rouse, Jennifer Jolley, Clint Needham, and Jason Bahr. He currently studies with Clifton Callender at Florida State University. For more information, visit www.JustinGiarrusso.com.